Farmer Alfalfa makes his debut into the great metropolis via the Penn. Station Gate. He walks to the center of the lobby, but the size of it gives him cold feet, and he tries to retreat, but the gate closes in his face. A big buck coon sees his is easy pickings, and escorts him to [redacted] free of charge. The taxi driver gets his also, [redacted] on find him in the middle of the street, admiring the [redacted] all buildings, entirely surrounded by New York. He is soon spotted by a crook lookout, who sickens some of the best talent in town after his watch. This beautiful vampire takes him to a cafe where lemonade is served and Al comes out pickled and trimmed. He then falls into the hands of gamblers and we find him playing poker down to his last chip. His little dog who has stuck faithfully by him, realizing that his master has been skinned, springs to the electric light cord and puts out the lights. Farmer Al Falfa gets the tip and what goes on in the darkness nobody knows, but out comes Al and his little dog with all the coin in the place and believe me they make the dust fly.
